

Story idea

What if the entire story was about an inanimate object or more specifically what that inanimate object saw and since they couldn't move nor talk nor do anything really what would be their reaction to everything they've seen and finally being able to move

let's say there was a doll that saw a murder of her owner the child get murdered in the dark at night, then her being donated to other people so on and so fourth

then her being put inside a box for 5 years in isolation in a dark box, then being transported to another country

She was sold to a family and after all of that messed up imagery, of her being isolated for so long and her not even being able to move or speak out that she's alive she meets a person who treated her like an actual person

Not like a doll or a decoration but instead a person who he could talk to and take care of emotionally the boy spoke to her about everything that would happen good or bad and some of the issues he had was relatable to her, like him being so alone and isolated or him feeling bad that toys even if they're lifeless are being treated that way, they still look somewhat alive, if they tore them apart it would be like them ripping apart the body of a small dog and their excuse being that they don't look alive enough or that they were made to be toyed with but then her not seeing him for a long time which lead to her believing the worst and getting depressed

Until someone found her and was taken away from the abandoned home in all that time she hasn't thought that her new owner forgot about her or didn't actually care about her because she was still kind of like a child and the worst she could imagine was the worst thing she's seen

But when she realized that he abandoned his home and left her there started a crisis inside of her mind that there could be far worse things than death that she could see and get emotional by

That was something that was so gut wrenching she started making a sad expression, it wasn't anything big but you could see her lips and eye lids move slightly which would make you think it was just you seeing things, since she couldn't tear up since she doesn't drink anything the best she could do to convey great amount of emotion was that

Her sadness pushed her to be able to do it at least for her face